EXAM FRAUD

A MESSAGE from the IEB

Learners who commit fraud during the conduct of examinations or misrepresent their results are often learners that one would not expect to do so. In essence, they either do not see their actions as fraudulent or problematic in any way, or they believe that their behaviour is justified.

For example:

- Copying in an examination or a test is fraud insofar as a learner is taking another person's work and passing it off as their own;
- Using crib notes or the assistance of a cellphone (internet etc.) is fraud insofar as the learner is giving him/herself additional assistance to what their fellow classmates have access to;
- Accessing information about what is in an examination or test beforehand through inappropriate means, e.g. a learner gains access to an examination paper from a WhatsApp group is fraud insofar as s/he has prior knowledge about the examination content which others do not.

One of the highest causes of examination fraud is pressure – pressure caused by parents, teachers or simply a learner's own anxiety to do well. Teachers and parents should be mindful of the very detrimental impact of unnecessary pressure.

Learners need to be confident that they have been well-taught and have had ample opportunity to prepare for the examination. They need to have support from their parents, family and others that are close to them that whatever happens, they are still loved and valued for the people they are. Learners who realise that they have the resources and the support they require, have no need to cheat. And even then, if something doesn't work out as one might want, there is always a second or third chance.

A 'pressure cooker' environment surrounding examination results is extremely toxic for learners. Parents knowingly or unknowingly create a stressful environment by laying unrealistic expectations as a mechanism to 'encourage' the learner. This pressure is the worst kind for many learners. Parents must be mindful that they are often the primary reason for unmanageable pressure on their children. Parental encouragement is essential but more important is their emotional support for their child – appreciation and love for the child for who they are rather than for what they achieve.
